PRESIDENT GOES XMAS SHOPPING AS CROWDS GAPE

President Wilson and Mrs. Wilson, it was learned today, made their first Christmas shopping expedition late yesterday afternoon. Mr. Wilson slipped out of the White House unobserved, except by the Secret Service men who followed him, until he was walking briskly along F street northwest. Few knew he was on the thoroughfare, shopping like others.

It was 4:45 p. m. when Mr. Wilson left the White House. At a quarter of 6 he was still in Galt's jewelry store, on Pennsylvania avenue, looking at silverware and jewelry, according to one who was in the store up to the time it closed when the crowd outside became so large that word spread the "President is inside."

Discovers Real Coal.

Mr. Wilson showed interest in several shop windows along a street. He literally stumbled over a half ton of furnace coal that was being delivered to the Washington Rubber Company, corner Tenth and F streets northwest.

"Why, here's coal," he said, turning to Mrs. Wilson and smiling.

Several enlisted men respectfully saluted as he passed them. Turning down Ninth street and going rapidly toward Pennsylvania avenue, Mr. Wilson found time to speak to a newsboy, whom he evidently knew. The younger man excitedly to his pal.

"Gee, he spoke to me!" he exclaimed.

Crowd Gathers.

Along Pennsylvania avenue people began to recognize Mr. Wilson. A small sized crowd at first grew into several hundred people by the time the President reached the jewelry store he was bound for.

President Wilson, looking robust and apparently in the best of spirits, chatted with Mrs. Wilson as they walked. He acted as pace maker for his party, his gait was so rapid. Mr. Wilson wore a brown fedora that was jaunty tilted slightly. A short gray overcoat was tightly buttoned over a walking coat. His striped trousers gave him the air of a business man.

Mrs. Wilson wore a dark walking suit, a black velvet hat trimmed with a light cerise velvet.

GOOD JOBS AT P. O.; PAY 35 CENTS AN HOUR

Abie-bodied men in search of employment may find remunerative temporary positions today if they will call at the postoffice. Great difficulty is being experienced in obtaining extra men and boys to aid in handling the holiday mail, postal officials say.

Men between twenty-one and fifty-five will be appointed at pay of 35 cents an hour. A man may work as long as he sees fit, officials said. The department also needs boys for the special delivery service. The boys will receive 8 cents for every message delivered. A messenger last month earned $150 and another who used an automobile earned $200.

The mail room is being constantly enlarged to permit greater facility in handling the volume of letters and packages. Workmen today were tearing away partitions and adding a row of offices to the space given over to the actual handling of the postal matter.

An idea of the volume now going through the local postoffice can be gained from the fact that the mail matter pertaining to the draft law is no longer counted by individual pieces. It is counted by the car load.

THRIFT STAMPS CAN BE ORDERED NOW BY POSTAL

Solicitors' cards to be used in an intensive campaign to bring war savings stamps and thrift stamps before every family in Washington are being sent out today by the Washington campaign committee, headed by E. J. Callahan.

These cards are in the form of postal cards and can be utilized as mail-order blanks. All that is needed is for the recipient to fill them out and drop them in any mail box. The postoffice will do the rest.

These cards will be given to Boy Scouts, women's organizations, school children, and others. They constitute an order blank for war stamps or thrift stamps, according to the method of filling them out. As the cards are brought in by mail carriers, they are checked and the orders filled. The stamps are turned over to the letter-carrier, who takes the stamps out on his next regular delivery.

In addition to this mail service on the stamps, Postmaster Chance has arranged for the delivery into every Washington home of the "War Savings Stamp Campaign." It is an eight-page leaflet giving full information about this latest Government security in the form of question and answer.
